	Schools should reopen for all children on the 1st of June	Schools should reopen on the 1st of June for the first and final year of primary school	Schools should only reopen when a vaccine for COVID19 has been found	The government is more concerned with a political battle with the education unions than the education of children	Unions are more concerned with a political battle with the government than the safety of teachers and pupils	Schools should only reopen when unions representing teachers agree that it is safe	Teachers are 'key workers' and should be prepared to work even if there is some risk in the same way that NHS staff and care staff do	The final decision to reopen should be taken by headteachers in consultation with local authorities following risk assessments	Given uncertainties about the pandemic, it is too soon to be opening up schools further	The Government is too distracted by the Dominic Cummings affair to be making the right decisions about opening up schools, nurseries and colleges
